Miller expands reach with new branch in Geneva, Switzerland

Miller is pleased to announce that it has registered a new branch in Geneva, Switzerland. The branch will initially focus on offering best-in-class credit and political risks solutions to new and existing clients, including financial institutions, commodity traders, exporters and investors.

Arnaud Froideval, Head of Miller's European credit and political risk team, commented: "Our Geneva branch will allow us to provide clients with easier access to our unique service proposition. This is a natural and exciting step in Miller's growth strategy, demonstrating our commitment to clients in the region, and achieving our ambitions of being the specialist credit and political risks broker of choice."

Expansion plans are also underway to broaden the remit of this hub to other insurance lines.

About Miller's Credit and Political Risks offering

Operating from our London, Paris, Singapore and now Geneva offices, Miller is a recognised expert in arranging tailored insurance programmes for international banks, commodity traders and industrial firms. This includes political risks, trade credit, terrorism and political violence, supply chain (including cargo and stocks) and trade disruption. Working with large risk managed organisations and captives, clients value our first-class service and innovative thinking.
