CONNECT WITH THE LEADING DEAL-MAKERS IN COMMODITY FINANCE

Round off Geneva commodities week in style along with over 300 of your industry peers for a two-day event of discussion, networking and education. Build your network, advance your fundraising and gain valuable insight from your peers.

WHAT TO EXPECT THIS YEAR

TXF is here to top-tackle the tough issues the commodities market is facing. With the world feeling like we are living upside down, traders and producers are facing serious challenges, from raising debt in a difficult market, to navigating volatility and supply squeezes, to higher logistical costs.

Join the conversation as we bring experts to the stage to cover how innovative digitalisation tools can close the trade finance gap, an expert economist dive into the rise of inflation for the European commodities market and plenty of sessions on how in this current climate the industry can weather the storm with emerging markets, sustainable finance and diversification.

2021 ATTENDEES

"This event is a must if you want to understand trends and become more visible with peers and customers"

Sabine Eberenz
Director, COMMERZBANK

"A very progressive and useful event that should not be missed!"

Orhan Gunes
Head of Commodity Trade Finance,
SBERBANK (SWITZERLAND) AG

"Excellent first experience in commodity finance. I've learnt a lot. Definitely a must attend conference in the commodity world"

Marcelo Garcete
Credit Manager, NOVARTIS

- 1 Traders are experiencing a disconnect between banking requirements and risk appetite with ESGs initiatives driving higher costs across the supply chain. The market demands a more standardised approach on both the sustainability and digitisation front as there is a lack of a uniform approach. However, hope is on the horizon as banks shift focus to streamlining their strategies.
- 2 Sustainability is being pushed along by clients, with 2020 being complicated is starting to get better for many traders, but with smaller traders still struggling to find the financing.
- 3 From the banking perspective, more liquidity is being directed towards top tier traders as SME traders find it more difficult to obtain credit resulting in more opportunities for alternative financiers. Calls for increasing requirements to diversify liquidity lines are applicable across the board with banks readying themselves to help clients obtain new credit support and investors.
- 4 Major players have stepped out of the CPRI market with momentum towards greener aspects growing. There is still work to be done within insurance as several changes to certain structures come to light on the sustainability and digitisation front.
- 5 Calculating traceability and transparency within the ESG space is challenging as the skills and processes to determine standards are still being developed globally. The lack of standardisation results in an extra layer of challenges as different players (from banks to traders) have unique focus points. This calculation becomes more difficult when addressing the social and governance issues with the ESGs. However, transparency in reporting emissions and environmental impact show no signs of stopping.
- 6 90% of commodity business is carried on maritime trade which is becoming a cleaner sector for the commodity industry.
- 7 Digitalisation is no longer an option it is a must have and there needs to be proper adoption. It is no longer a technology project and while legal frameworks are being finalised across jurisdictions, the tipping point is technology must solve real business problems.
- 8 Alternative finance is helping smaller and medium sized traders receive the financing they need, filling the gap the banks have left with their role continuously expanding. Opportunities for collaboration with commercial banks will also grow given the greater flexibility alternative lenders have in their overall offering within the commodity finance sector.
