The ECA market is historically underpinned by a few headline grabbing mega deals each year. What do these say about our market? Will we see more of these in recovery? Every market has several of these massive projects. What drives them? Are they government driven natural resource plays? Will the drive towards sustainability and social projects see a shift to more deals with smaller volumes? Or will the energy transition and resilient infrastructure projects replace existing carbon heavy industries?

AGENDA - DAY 2, OCTOBER 20

7.30 CEST

Morning Run

Join our CEO, Dan Sheriff, for a morning run around Madrid

9.00 CEST

TXF Opening Remarks

9.05 CEST

Macroeconomic keynote: Plotting the course for a V-shaped recovery

With the economy bouncing back with confidence in the US, Europe and Asia, yet still at a precrisis level, and a less optimistic outlook in developing economies, we assess where we are in what has been billed a V-shaped recovery. What will be the effect of rising inflation? Will we see sustained levels of stimulus and for how long will they stay? With infrastructure investment tipped to be the tool for recovery, are we where we need to be?

9.25 CEST

Keynote state of industry presentation: Leveraging the tools of export finance to aid in an ESG-led recovery

With ESG and sustainability the most important issue, a healthy and liquid export finance market is a well-suited counter cyclical product. We ask how export finance can rise to the challenge to meet the demands of trillions of dollars of investment needed to finance sustainable and resilient infrastructure in order to stimulate economic growth globally?

Reserved for CEO, CFO of large corporate institutions*

9.40 CEST

Borrowers' panel: A product fit for purpose

The counter cyclical nature of the product bodes well for appetite for ECA backed debt, and we catch up with key borrowers to understand their balance sheet requirements and what banks and ECAs can do help them get more projects over the line. With increased flexibility developed over the pandemic, how can we further tweak the product to make it fit for purpose?

Just a quick note to congratulate you for last week's event. It was a great success from the numbers you have shown and certainly I very much enjoyed it. You have been adapting to the challenging circumstances better than anybody else, mastering quickly the virtual-conference technology, without losing your signature humorous touch (particularly appreciated given the times!), confirming your leadership in the industry.
